

Victims & Offenders

An International Journal of Evidence-based Research, Policy, and Practice

ISSN: (Print) (Online) Journal homepage: <https://www.tandfonline.com/loi/uvao20>

About the Authors in Our Special Issue

To cite this article: (2020): About the Authors in Our Special Issue, Victims & Offenders, DOI: 10.1080/15564886.2020.1839613

To link to this article: <https://doi.org/10.1080/15564886.2020.1839613>

Published online: 12 Nov 2020.

Submit your article to this journal ↗

Article views: 103

View related articles ↗

View Crossmark data ↗

About the Authors in Our Special Issue

Carolina Agoff is a senior researcher at the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM) since 2004. She received her Ph.D. in Psychology at Free University of Berlin (Germany) in 2001. Her main research interest is the empirical study of gender violence in different settings such as indigenous communities and universities, among undocumented Latino workers in the USA or lower-class urban working women. Her current work focuses on prison populations in Mexico with a narrative criminological approach.

Emma Ahlstrand serves as an officer for the Security Planning Unit in the headquarters of the Swedish Prison and Probation Service (SPPS). After earning her degree in forensic psychology, she started working for the SPPS in 2016 as a correctional officer at a jail and prison; she currently teaches at the SPPS National Correctional Officer Training Program.

Joana Andrade, M.S. in Applied Psychology, is a researcher in the Psychology Research Centre at the University of Minho. She is involved in several research projects, conferences and international publications in criminal psychology. Her research interests are mainly in criminality, offending behavior, and offender treatment and rehabilitation.

Antonio Andrés-Pueyo is a Professor of Violence Psychology and Criminal Psychology and Director of the Department of Clinical Psychology and Psychobiology at the University of Barcelona. His main research area is violence risk assessment in professional settings. He has published papers and reports in violence prevention, aggression, impulsivity, individual differences and personality.

Daniela Barberi is a doctoral student in the Criminology, Law and Society program at George Mason University (GMU). She holds a Master's in Criminal Justice from the Pennsylvania State University (USA) where she earned two awards (Outstanding Graduate Student and Outstanding Master's Thesis) and a Bachelor of Arts in Psychology from the Universidad de Los Andes (Bogota, Colombia). Daniela currently works with the Pan American Development Foundation (PADF) based in Bogota, Colombia. Her research interests include corrections, translational research, alternatives to incarceration, reentry programs, prisoner treatment, and minority populations.

Marcelo Bergman is a Professor of Sociology and Criminology at Universidad Tres de Febrero (UNTREF), Argentina. He is also the Director of the Center for Latin American Studies on Insecurity and Violence (CELIV). He has been an advisor to the Ministry of Justice in Argentina in prisoner reentry topics and coordinated more than 15 surveys of prisoners in Latin America and the Caribbean. His areas of expertise include public security, illegal drugs and public policy, taxation, compliance, and the rule of law in Latin America. Dr. Bergman is particularly interested in evidence-based research on criminal justice, citizen security and illegal drug policies in Latin America, with a focus on sound data collection. His two most recent books are: More Money, More Crime (Oxford U Press, 2018) and Prisons and Crime in Latin America (coauthored with Gustavo Fondevila, Cambridge U. Press, 2021).

Dr. Conrad M. Bosire is the Chief of Staff in the Office of the Chief Justice, and the Acting Executive Director of the National Council on the Administration of Justice (NCAJ), a statutory body that coordinates justice sector agencies to ensure coherence in the administration of justice. Dr. Bosire is an expert in law, governance, and human rights, and holds a Doctor of Philosophy (Law) from the University of the Western Cape (UWC), South Africa, and a Master of Law (LLM) from the University of Pretoria (UP).

Pauline K. Brennan is a Professor and the Ph.D. Program Director for the School of Criminology and Justice Studies at the University of Massachusetts Lowell. Her research focuses on racial and gender inequities in court processing, corrections policy, and issues related to female offenders and victims. She has been the principal investigator on projects funded by the National Institute of Corrections and the Foundation for the Carolinas and has worked closely on policy-relevant research with community practitioners in North Carolina, Nebraska, and Iowa. For over a decade, she has served as the Director of a study abroad program to London, England, through her professional contacts with English prison staff, court personnel, and police officers. Her work has appeared in Justice Quarterly, The Journal of Quantitative Criminology, and Criminal Justice and Behavior.

James M. Byrne is a Professor in the School of Criminology and Justice Studies at University of Massachusetts Lowell, and Director of the Global Community Corrections Initiative (www.glob.cci.org). His edited texts include: The Social Ecology of Crime (1986), Smart Sentencing: The Emergence of Intermediate Sanctions (1994), The New Technology of Crime, Law and Social Control (2007), and The Culture of Prison Violence (2008). Dr. Byrne currently serves as a member of the Independent Review Committee responsible for advising the U.S. Attorney General on the design and implementation of the Risk Need Assessment System that is a central component of the Congressionally mandated 2018 First Step Act, a major federal prison reform initiative. Dr. Byrne also serves as a member, Panel of Experts – Correctional Services Advisory and Accreditation Panel, Ministry of Justice, United Kingdom. He previously served as the External Inspector of Prisons, Office of the Inspector General, Queensland Correctional Services, Australia (2014), where he conducted an independent review of the prison assault problem in Queensland's prisons.

Michael B. Cahapay is an Assistant Professor at Mindanao State University, General Santos City, Philippines. He is completing his Ph.D. in Education at the University of the Philippines, Diliman. His recent research examines the vulnerable groups of society amid the COVID-19 crisis.

Kimberly Collica-Cox is a Professor in the Criminal Justice and Security Department with PACE University and the Director of the Parenting, Prison, & Pups Program. Prior to teaching, Dr. Collica-Cox worked for a women's correctional facility in NYS coordinating an HIV prison-based peer education program and for a NY jail supervising the jail-based transitional services unit. She trains professionals in HIV-related issues in the NYS Metropolitan area and is a certified ACA (American Correctional Association) and PREA (Prison Rape Elimination Act) Auditor. Her research focuses on incarcerated women, rehabilitation, reintegration, prison-based programming, and female correctional executives. She is the recipient of the prestigious National Jefferson Award for Public Service and the Ken Peak Innovation in Teaching Award from the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences.

Anne Crocker is full Professor at the Department of Psychiatry & Addictions and the School of Criminology at the Université de Montréal, the Director of Research and Academics at the Philippe Pinel Institute, and President of the International Association of Forensic Mental Health Services. She sits on many national forensic mental health policy advisory committees. Her research program focuses on the interface between justice and mental health, forensic mental health services, and pathways to violence.

Jean Damasse is a member of the Rapid Evidence Assessment Team that conducted the review of COVID-19 responses in secure psychiatric settings. He has contributed to various research projects in the field of social research, and his work has appeared in the Journal of Urban Sociology. Since 2012, he has worked as a research professional in health technology assessment in the social services sector.

Janeen M. Davis is an RN Supervisor with over 26 years of correctional experience transitioning from line staff, Training Academy educator, Diagnostic and Classification Center RN supervisor to working with the Department's Bureau of Health Care Administration on policy development, internal management reviews, and special projects. She graduated from Penn State University with a BS in Nursing and a Master's in Health Education. Ms. Davis has been a key member of the COVID-19 medical assessment team providing critical guidance to the field and leadership.

Dr. Mercy Deche is a Lecturer at the School of Law, University of Nairobi, Mombasa Campus. She is also the current Vice Chairperson of the Judicial Service Commission. In the past, she has served as a Special Prosecutor for Sexual and Gender Based Violence cases. Her areas of specialization are access to justice, restorative justice, legal research, and gender.

Alexandre M. A. Diniz is a Professor in the Geography Department at the Pontifical Catholic University of Minas Gerais (PUC Minas). He holds a bachelor's degree in Advertising from PUC Minas; a master's degree in Geography from Kansas State University, and a Ph.D. in Geography from Arizona State University. He was a visiting scholar at McGill University, Université de Lille, Curtin University, and Texas State University. His experience is in the field of Human Geography, acting on the following subjects: Geography of Crime and Violence, Urban Geography, and Regional Geography.

Jared R. Dmello is an Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice in the Department of Social Sciences at Texas A&M International University. His research focuses on collective action, covering primarily terrorism, ethnic conflict, and criminal street gangs. Dr. Dmello is the recipient of the 2020 Ken Peak Innovations in Teaching Award from the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences and the Principal Investigator on a National Institute of Justice funded examination of street gang networks.

Audrey-Anne Dumais-Michaud holds a Ph.D. in Sociology and is an Associate Professor of Social Work at the Université du Québec en Outaouais. Her research focuses on mental health, social problems, as well as social and penal policies. She is also a researcher at the Mental Health and Justice Hub.

Frieder Dünkler was the previous President of the European Society of Criminology (ESC, 2015–2016), a previous Dean of Law (1994–1995), and Vice-Rector (2010–2013) of the University of Greifswald in northeast Germany. He taught criminology, penology, juvenile justice, criminal procedure and criminal law at the University of Greifswald Faculty of Law and Economics, from 1992 to 2015 and has conducted many research projects, including international comparative projects on male prisons in the countries around the Baltic Sea, female imprisonment in Europe, long-term imprisonment in 10 European countries, youth violence and juvenile justice systems in Europe (covering 33 European jurisdictions). From 2011 to 2015, he coordinated a survey on the legal aspects and practice of restorative justice in 36 European jurisdictions (funded by the EU). He has published widely in these areas (by 2020, 47 books and 615 articles in criminal justice journals and books) and organized numerous international conferences on prison research, juvenile justice, and restorative justice.

Ioan Durnescu is a Professor at the University of Bucharest/Faculty of Sociology and Social Work. He worked previously in the prison and probation departments in Romania. He is currently co-editor of the European Probation Journal. Ioan Durnescu conducts research, delivers training and courses and offers consultancy services in Romania, Kenya and other countries on prison, probation, and deradicalization issues.

Olga Espinoza is a doctoral candidate in the Social Sciences Department at the University of Chile. She is a lecturer at the School of Public Affairs at the University of Chile, where she teaches public policy in criminal justice, prison systems, and citizen security issues. She has worked as consultant in international organizations (Ford Foundation, Interamerican Development Bank, Organization of American States, United Nations Development Program, and EU – EUROSociAL) and as a researcher in academic centers, mainly in Chile and Brazil. Her research interests include criminal justice, citizen security, female criminality, prison policies, and social reintegration processes. She is a lawyer and holds a Master of Law from the University of Sao Paulo (Brazil).

Gustavo Fondevila is a Professor at the Center for Economic Research and Teaching (CIDE) in Mexico City. He holds a Ph.D. in Law from the University of Buenos Aires (Argentina). He is the author of numerous papers in specialized academic publications. Author — with Marcelo Bergman — of Prisons and Crime in Latin America, Cambridge University Press (2020). His research focuses on empirical comparative criminology in Latin America.

Rui Abrunhosa Gonçalves is an Associate Professor with tenure in the School of Psychology at the University of Minho (Braga, Portugal). His research interests include violent and dangerous offenders (psychopaths, sexual abusers, spouse abusers) and the correctional system's response. He also works as a forensic psychologist court expert.

Natalia Hanley is a Senior Lecturer in Criminology in the School of Health and Society at the University of Wollongong. She is a qualitative researcher working on gender-based violence, practices of punishment, and wildlife crime.

Catherine Heard is a Senior Research Fellow at the Institute for Crime & Justice Policy Research (ICPR), based at Birkbeck, University of London. At ICPR, Catherine directs the World Prison Research Programme. This program of international comparative research on prisons and imprisonment builds on the work of the World Prison Brief, ICPR's online database providing details of the prison systems of over 220 independent countries and dependent territories. Catherine worked as a commercial litigation lawyer in London before moving into criminal justice policy and international human rights law, and has held positions at the Law Commission of England & Wales and the NGOs Fair Trials and the Center for Crime and Justice Studies.

Don Hummer is an Associate Professor in the School of Public Affairs, Penn State Harrisburg. His research interests are broadly focused on corrections policy, violence, and the implications of technological advances for justice system actors. He is co-editor of The Culture of Prison Violence (2008) and Handbook of Police Administration (2008). Recent peer-reviewed articles have appeared in The Prison Journal, Federal Probation, and Journal of Urban Affairs.

Christopher Inkpen is a Research Sociologist and Demographer in the Division for Applied Justice Research at RTI International. He studies quantitative criminology, specifically the application of machine learning techniques to social science data. His substantive research focuses on the intersection of migration and crime.

Jenny Kärholm is the Head of the Research and Evaluation Unit within the Swedish Prison and Probation Service (SPPS). Jenny earned a Ph.D. in Rehabilitation Medicine and has many years of experience within Swedish government agencies.

Kimberly R. Kras is an Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice in the School of Public Affairs at San Diego State University. Her research considers the experiences of formerly incarcerated persons upon reentry and how the community supervision system supports this transition. Dr. Kras' work has been published in Criminology, Justice Quarterly, and Criminology and Public Policy.

Ashley Lemieux is a Planning, Programming and Research Officer, in the Justice, Security, and Mental Health Technology Assessment Unit at the Institut National de Psychiatrie Légale Philippe-Pinel, Quebec. Ashley's research interests include forensic psychiatry and vulnerable populations, recovery in mental illness, violence risk assessment, homelessness, justice diversion, sexual health, and intimacy.

Alain Lesage is a Professor in the Department of Psychiatry at the University of Montréal, a psychiatrist at the Montréal University Mental Health Institute (IUSMM) and a researcher at its Research Center. Through evaluative and epidemiological research, he studies the care and services needs of people with severe mental disorders. In 1997, he founded a module to evaluate the development of psychiatric services which, in autumn 2011, became the hospital-based mental health technology assessment unit of the IUSMM. Alain Lesage's research interests include schizophrenia, suicide, mood disorders, and other related disorders.

Spencer Li is a Professor in the Department of Sociology at University of Macau. His research interests include substance abuse, child development, corrections, and survey research. Dr. Li has served as principal investigator on many publicly and privately funded projects related to adolescent development, religion, substance abuse and criminal justice, including grants from the U.S. National Institute of Health, U.S. Administration for Children and Families, and Social Welfare Bureau of the Government of Macau. His publications have appeared in several leading criminology and penology journals.

Maria Lindström is currently working as Head of the Security Planning Unit in the headquarters of the Swedish Prison and Probation Service (SPPS). She previously served as Liaison and Policy Officer for CEP (Confederation of European Probation) and as governor of the Probation Services in the county of Stockholm. Maria has an academic background in social work and criminology. Maria has a broad range of experience from different managerial positions in prison, jail and probation offices in national and international positions. Maria has been working in different positions within the SPPS since the beginning of the twenty-first century.

Tzu-Hsuan Liu is an Assistant Professor at School of Political Science and Public Administration at Huaqiao University. Her research interests include the Chinese criminal justice system, drug policy, and juvenile delinquency. She has published several articles on the Chinese problem-solving courts, juvenile delinquency and family violence.

Lina Marmolejo is a doctoral candidate in the Criminology, Law and Society Department at George Mason University (GMU). She holds a master's degree in Public Administration from the Institute of Political Studies (Paris, France) and a bachelor's on Finance and International Relations from Universidad Externado de Colombia (Bogota, Colombia). Her research interests include criminal justice and security sector reform, pretrial justice, community corrections, rehabilitation, and reentry programs. Prior to her studies at GMU, she worked at the Inter-American Development Bank and the Organization of American States, in the design, management and implementation of international development projects, with an emphasis on crime and violence prevention in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Louis Molina is the First Deputy Commissioner at Westchester County Department of Corrections. He is a second generation, decorated veteran of the U.S. Marine Corps, with over twenty years of experience in the public sector, namely in the criminal justice arena having worked in policing, the District Attorney's office and corrections. His current role as

First Deputy Commissioner has allowed him to operationalize sustainable criminal justice reform practices that advance the principles of social justice in an effort to break the cycle of poverty, crime, and abuse.

Esther Montero Pérez de Tudela is a Penitentiary Institutions Jurist and Associate lecturer in the Criminal Law and Criminology Department at the Universidad Loyola Andalucía. She has a law degree from the University of Seville and a Ph.D. in Criminology from the University of Lausanne (Switzerland), at the School of Criminal Sciences. Since 2010, Dr. Montero has been a member of the Technical Superior Body of Penitentiary Institutions (Spanish Ministry of the Interior). She was Deputy Director of Treatment at the Huelva Penitentiary Center from 2012 to 2017 and is currently Jurist-criminologist at the Alcalá de Guadaíra Penitentiary Center. She has participated as an expert in several international exchange programs on prison issues (among them several EU Twinning Projects) and has participated in a range of international research projects funded by the European Commission, all related to prison issues.

Ioana Morar is an Associate Professor at the University of Bucharest/Faculty of Sociology and Social Work. She has more than 16 years of continuous experience working in the field of corrections (e.g., treatment of persons deprived of liberty, mental health care, rehabilitation and reducing re-offending, human resources, and staff training) in Romania, Azerbaijan, Lebanon, Moldova, Montenegro, Algeria. For more than seven years, she has been the Eastern Europe Regional Representative in the European Prison Education Association.

Julie Katia Morin-Major is currently a pediatric resident at Beaumont Hospital, Royal Oak. She holds a Master of Science in Neurosciences, which she conducted at the Center for Studies on Human Stress. She has also worked as a research professional in health technology assessment.

Danielle J. Murdoch is a Lecturer in the School of Criminology at Simon Fraser University where she obtained her Ph.D. after completing an M.Phil in Criminological Research at the University of Cambridge. Her main research interests concern correctional policy, practice and pedagogy. Dr. Murdoch is the coauthor, with Dr. Curt T. Griffiths, of an introductory corrections textbook, Canadian Corrections, and has recent publications in the Journal of Crime and Justice and the Journal of Criminal Justice Education. She is also the winner of the 2019 Lesley B. Cormack Award for Excellence in Teaching in the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences at SFU.

Laura J. Murray is a graduate student in the Criminology and Criminal Justice Program at San Diego State University and researches reentry experiences, especially for women, and the public and correctional policies governing the transition from prison to the community.

Chelsey S. Narvey is an Assistant Professor in the College of Criminal Justice at Sam Houston State University. Her research interests include criminological theory, corrections, and developmental/life-course criminology, and she does work at the intersection of corrections and life-course theory. She has published on telemedicine and the way it can be used in correctional settings. Some of her work can be found in the Journal of Correctional Healthcare, as well as in Aggression & Violent Behavior.

To Nhu Nguyen is the Associate Director of the Office of the Academic Mission of Montreal's Mental Health University Institute (IUSMM) and of the Ultra-Specialized Mental Health Services in the Mental Health, Addictions and Homelessness Directorate of the East-Montreal Integrated University Health and Social Services Center (CIUSSS de l'Est-de-l'Île-de-Montréal). She has more than 20 years of experience in the health and social services sector.

Javier Nistal is a lawyer in the Spanish prison system, where he has held important positions, such as Director General of Criminal Enforcement and Social Reintegration. He is the author of several publications on prison issues and a regular contributor to seminars, conferences and courses for various institutions. He has also participated as an expert in several international exchange programs on prison issues.

Dr. Kathryn M. Nowotny is an Assistant Professor in the University of Miami Department of Sociology. Her research uses both quantitative and qualitative methods to examine the multilevel factors that create increased risk for poor health among justice-involved people. Dr. Nowotny is the cofounder of COVID Prison Project and Site-Principal Investigator of a multi-site longitudinal cohort study examining barriers to PrEP for HIV prevention among individuals under community supervision in the South (NC, FL, KY). She is also PI of a Center for HIV and Research in Mental Health (CHARM) funded project exploring the syndemic pathways to suboptimal care for justice-involved patients living with HIV, and Co-I of a binational study investigating how the migration process influences health, including experiences with immigration enforcement and confinement to detention centers.

Meghan A. Novisky is an Assistant Professor of Criminology at Cleveland State University. Her research investigates the implications of carceral contact for health and well-being, conditions of confinement, and the collateral consequences of criminal justice policy. Her work has been published in Criminology, Justice Quarterly, the Journal of Correctional Health Care, and the Journal of Crime and Justice.

Sergey Ovchinnikov is the Deputy Head of the Research Institute of the FSP of Russia, Moscow, RU, Ph.D. in Sociology. His research focuses on the penitentiary system of Russia, and judicial practices in the European Court of Human Rights involving the protections of conventional rights in the field of criminal justice. He is the author of more than 90 scientific papers on criminal justice and penitentiary policy.

Michael Palmieri is a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts Lowell in the School of Criminology and Justice Studies. Recently, he engaged in research using technology to assess the experiences of substance using probationers under community supervision. His research mostly focuses on terrorist use of the internet, cybercrime, and online radicalization through interdisciplinary theoretical approaches.

April Pattavina is a Professor in the School of Criminology and Justice Studies at the University of Massachusetts Lowell. Her research focuses on correctional reform, program evaluation, and the criminal justice system's response to violence. Her work often involves collaborative researcher practitioner partnerships with criminal justice agencies, and she has extensive experience working with large law enforcement and corrections related data sources. She has received grant funding from federal agencies such as the National Science Foundation, the National Institute of Justice, and the Office of Violence Against Women. Her most recent project includes a National Science Foundation funded project to explore ways in which emerging technologies can support people on community supervision.

Jason Payne is a Professor of Criminology and Social Policy in the School of Health and Society at the University of Wollongong. His research interests include quantitative crime data analysis, program evaluation, drugs and crime, and developmental and life-course criminology. Jason is formerly a Research Manager with the Australian Institute of Criminology.

Alex R. Piquero is Chair and Professor of the Department of Sociology and Arts & Sciences and Distinguished Scholar at the University of Miami and Professor of Criminology at Monash University in Melbourne Australia. He is also editor of Justice Evaluation Journal. His research interests include criminal careers, criminological theory, crime policy, evidence-based crime prevention, and quantitative research methods. He has received several research, teaching, and service awards, is fellow of both the American Society of Criminology and the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences. In 2019 he received the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences Bruce Smith, Sr. Award for outstanding contributions to criminal justice and in 2020 he was awarded the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Division of Developmental and Life Course Criminology, a division within the American Society of Criminology.

Wayne J. Pitts is a Research Criminologist in the Applied Justice Research Division at RTI International. He has conducted research and implemented projects in the Dominican Republic, Belize, Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras. His current research interests include international criminology, especially in Central America; transnational migration; and international corrections.

Sheetal Ranjan is a Professor in the Department of Sociology & Criminal Justice at William Paterson University, USA. Her primary focus is applied research and she has received more than one million dollars in federal funding to establish evidence-based violence prevention and intervention programs. Dr. Ranjan is a past chair of the Division on Women & Crime (DWC) of the American Society of Criminology (ASC). In her term as DWC's chair, she led its First Congressional Briefing at the Capitol Hill and its first participation in the Commission on the Status of Women CSW63 at the United Nations Headquarters in New York City. She also serves on the New Jersey Study Commission on Violence, on ASC's policy committee and the board of the Crime and Justice Research Alliance.

Sabrina S. Rapisarda is a doctoral student in the School of Criminology and Justice Studies at the University of Massachusetts Lowell. Much of Sabrina's work has been anchored in the public health framework, where she studies topics in the realm of sexual perpetration, namely campus sexual misconduct in university and college community contexts as well as sex offender supervision and treatment. She has recently embarked on research that investigates various aspects of the criminal justice system's response to COVID-19, including global correctional mitigation strategies and domestic responses to COVID-19 among vulnerable populations – individuals who are experiencing homelessness and/or engaging in chronic illicit drug use.

Santiago Redondo is Professor of Psychology and Criminology at the University of Barcelona (Spain). His research encompasses the fields of program evaluation, institutional and community treatment, and the prevention and control of criminal behavior. His recent research studies involve analyses of the link between juvenile delinquency and adult crime, and the effectiveness of treatment strategies targeting violent and sex offenders. He has published numerous books, book chapters, and papers on all of these subjects.

Ludmila Ribeiro is an Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology and a researcher in the Center for Crime and Public Safety Studies (CRISP), both at the Federal University of Minas Gerais (UFMG). She holds a bachelor's degree in Law from the Federal University of Minas Gerais, a master's and a bachelor's degree in Public Administration from João Pinheiro Foundation, and a Ph.D. in Sociology from Rio de Janeiro Research Institute (IUPERJ). She was a visiting scholar at the University of Florida, University of Groningen, and Texas State University. During her career, she has coordinated several research projects on how the criminal justice system operates in Brazil. Nowadays, her research interests are focused on first appearance hearings, homicide trials, and management of penitentiary systems.

Sveinung Sandberg is a Professor of Criminology at the University of Oslo. He holds a Ph.D. in sociology from the University of Bergen, Norway. He has written the book Street Capital (2011, Policy Press with Willy Pedersen) and several journal articles on street culture and crime with a Bourdieusian approach. Sandberg is also co-founder of Narrative Criminology (e.g., Presser and Sandberg 2015) and has worked to integrate narrative and discourse analytical approaches in criminology. His research focuses on processes of marginalization, violence, illegal drugs, social movements, and political and religious extremism.

José J. Semedo Moreira is an anthropologist with a variety of publications about the prison system. At present, he is Director of Communication Services and External Relations at the General Directorate of Reinsertion and Prison Services in Portugal.

Daniel Semenza is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology, and Criminal Justice at Rutgers University – Camden. His research interests include gun violence, victimization, and the dynamic links between health, crime, and the criminal justice system.

Claire Seungeun Lee is an Assistant Professor in the School of Criminology and Justice Studies at the University of Massachusetts Lowell. Her research interests include human, social, and big data aspects of cybercrime and cybersecurity and global and comparative perspectives on crime and deviance.

Carlos Soler is Deputy Director of Prison Services of Catalonia for Rehabilitation Programs. His work is focused on rehabilitation and treatment programs for offenders, community corrections, risk assessment and management of violent behavior, strategic planning, and project management. He also works on research and training for correctional services and offender desistance.

John Wetzel is the Secretary of Corrections in the state of Pennsylvania, USA. He was appointed Secretary of Corrections in January 2011, following a 22-year career in county corrections. During his tenure as Secretary, not only did the Department of Corrections experience the end of a 24-year average growth of 1,500 inmates per year, but also the first population reduction in Pennsylvania in over 4 decades, with a total reduction, thus far, of over 4,200 inmates. He has served as Chair of the Justice Center's Executive Board of the Council of State Government, of which he is now a member. He also served as the recent President of the CLA (Correctional Leaders Association), formerly ASCA, and a member of Harvard's Executive Session on Community Corrections. On the federal level, he was tapped by the Obama administration to be the corrections expert on the Chuck Colson Taskforce – which was a congressionally created group tasked with assessing the Federal Bureau of Prisons and providing the Administration and Congress with recommendations on improvement. More recently, he was named by the Trump administration to the congressionally created oversight committee to the federal First Step Act. He is a graduate of Bloomsburg University and recipient of honorary Doctorate degrees from both Indiana University of Pennsylvania and Chestnut Hill College.